

Barlett & Steele Archive

Biographical Note:

Journalists Donald L. Barlett (1936-) and James B. Steele (1943-) worked together at The Philadelphia Inquirer, (1971-1997), Time Magazine, (1997-2006), and as contributing editors at Vanity Fair (2006-). They also have written eight books. Barlett and Steele pioneered the reporting methods now standard in their profession. In 1972, they used a computer to analyze more than 1,000 cases of violent crime in Philadelphia. "Crime and Injustice" was the largest computer-assisted project of its time and was widely replicated by other journalists for years afterward. Barlett and Steele won two Pulitzer Prizes and scores of other national journalism awards for their work at The Philadelphia Inquirer and two National Magazine Awards at Time Magazine.

Scope and Content Note:

The Barlett and Steele Archive (1971-2010) consists of materials created and collected by Donald L. Barlett and James B. Steele in connection with their research for published and unpublished newspaper and magazine articles and books. It contains raw research on unfinished and unpublished projects, as well as leads on potential stories. The archive includes audiovisual materials, books, corporate and government reports, correspondence, Freedom of Information Act filings, interview notes and transcriptions, manuscripts, statistical analyses, tax returns, and numerous letters from readers expressing their views on a wide range of issues or suggesting future stories. The files relate to a variety of topics including criminal justice, energy, federal housing programs, foreign aid, Howard Hughes, Indian gaming, litigation, nuclear waste, Olympics, Nelson A. Rockefeller, and taxes. The collection tracks decades of public policy-making on these issues and includes court records, government audits, property records, and legislative histories that detail the manipulation of public policy by special interests.

Series Descriptions and Preliminary Inventory

Please be advised that this collection is only minimally processed so the inventory does not list every folder.

Series 1: Federal Housing Administration Scandal

This series consists of the materials collected for Barlett & Steele's 1971 exposé in The Philadelphia Inquirer of how real estate speculators in Philadelphia and other cities misused a program intended to promote low income home ownership. Their investigation discovered that poor families were being charged exorbitant prices for houses that often fell apart weeks later.
